UNIVERSITY OF LINCOLN JOB DESCRIPTION

JOB TITLE	Senior Lecturer – Earth Surface Processes
DEPARTMENT	School of Geography
LOCATION	Brayford
JOB NUMBER	COS722	GRADE	8	DATE	December 2019
REPORTS TO	Head of School

CONTEXT

Established in September 2016 by its foundational head Professor Mark G Macklin, the School of Geography at the University of Lincoln represents one of the “most significant investments in UK university geography for a generation” (Dr Rita Gardner CBE, former director of the Royal Geographical Society). The school currently has 146 undergraduate and postgraduate students, 20 academic, research and support staff, and its first cohort of undergraduates will graduate in September 2020. We are particularly proud of our demographically and internationally diverse academic team, who bring global reach to both their research and teaching, and are soon to be joined by a new chair of Human Geography. We have established a core interdisciplinary research centre, the Lincoln Centre of Water and Planetary Health (LCWPH), the first of its kind in the UK, and have recently appointed Professor Chris J Thomas (Global Chair in Water and Planetary Health) as co-director alongside Professor Macklin. The LCWPH focuses on solving the most pressing global environmental and societal problems emerging from the world’s largest rivers. These include climate change impacts on extreme floods and droughts, flood-related contamination from metal mining and processing, and water-borne diseases affecting humans and animals where riverine environments provide the principle habitat. An emerging area of interest is in environmental flows of antibiotic contaminants and subsequent spatial evolutionary ecology of antimicrobial resistance.
